

SOLANDER TRAIL SPRING WALKABOUT KWG

The Solander Trail is an easy walk – about 2.5 kms long on a wide, sealed track and with no steps. At a medium pace it takes less than one hour. If you walk the trail in an anti-clockwise direction the sealed track breaks into two branches after about 250 metres but these branches come together again after a further 250 metres. The left-hand branch takes you past the Knoll Garden (a ‘showcase’ garden for native plants) and Lambert’s Clearing (where wallabies are likely to be seen). Further on, at the lowest point of the trail (Endlicher Point), the track turns and climbs back uphill towards the entrance to Ku-ring-gai Wildflower Garden.

Just some of the plants in flower beside the Solander Trail are shown below.

(Ku-ring-gai Garden itself extends well beyond Endlicher Point – to lower sections beside Tree Fern Gully Creek and Ku-ring-gai Creek. The Mueller Track passing through this lower section is of medium difficulty (steep in places with many steps) and takes about two hours to walk. A somewhat different range of plants can be seen beside this track.)
